Note: These entries will gradually be annotated. Furthermore, an entry is only included once, regardless of wider relevance. Eventually, all entries will be cross-listed to indicate other areas where a particular piece of research might be of use.

This list has been compiled chiefly from direct surveys of the literature with additional information supplied by the bibliographies of numerous and various sources listed in the present bibliography. Additional sources include submissions from members of the BurmaResearch, EarlyBurma, and SEAHTP egroups, as well as public domain listings of personal publications on the internet.

DISCLAIMER: This bibliography is solely a guide or survey to the literature. No claim is made for the accuracy or completeness of the information provided in this bibliography. The information provided is intended only as an initial survey of the literature. This site and its owner do not accept any responsibility for problems resulting from the use of the information provided. All information should be verified elsewhere. Suggestions are always welcome. Please note that newspaper and newsletter articles will not be included in this list, as most are short pieces or extracts from already, or eventually to be, published works.

San Shwe Bu. "The Coronation of King Datha-raja (1153-1165 A.D.)." Journal of the Burma Research Society 7 (1917): 181-184.

In his works, San Shwe Bu tended to confuse the chronicles he used. There is some question regarding whether these sources were from early periods, or "reinterpreted" according to the contemporary popular perspectives of Arakanese in his own time. The use of the information in this article as a primary source is to be avoided [M.W.C.].
